

FROM THE PUBLISHER

FURTHER TO AN EDITOR'S NOTE THAT APPEARED IN THE JOURNAL SOGC 1997;19;8:817.

It was stated that the Pharmaceutical Advertising Advisory Board pre-screens infant formula advertisements. This information was incorrect and mistakenly passed by the publisher to the Editor of the Journal SOGC. Infant formula's are defined as nutritional supplements and fall outside of the ken of PAAB's review process. Furthermore, infant formula promotion is governed by a World Health Organization Code. The acceptance of further advertisement of this nature has been suspended pending a decision by the SOGC Executive. It should be noted that the Journal SOGC has been in the forefront of promoting breastfeeding amongst Canadian women, and in this issue we have a feature article by prominent breastfeeding advocate, Dr. Beverley Chalmers.

Please accept this apology on behalf of the Journal SOGC.

Publisher.

"At our house, my Mom likes me to read to her, because she can't read by herself."

Eric Thom, 7

At Eric's age, his mother would be happy to read to him. But she can't, because she has multiple sclerosis. She has double vision and her hands shake, so she can't do a lot of the things a mother would like to do. But she's grateful that she's not paralyzed, which could happen. And she's grateful for her little boy who loves her just the same.

Tens of thousands of people in Canada have multiple sclerosis, stopping them from doing the things that others do without a second thought.

Become a volunteer. Make a donation. Together, we'll find a way to stop multiple sclerosis.
